

The easiest way to describe it is that I think culture is what makes us different, but what also allows us to blend in so well together. Everybody is different but we are all people, and we should realize that we are all capable of caring for each other and working well in a society.